He went to the wise old Bizcracker Bird, who lived in a grand old tree.

The animals knew she was ever so bright, as clever as you or as me.

The great palm tree had a big brown door,
with a bell and a gold number five.
(The number was so you knew where you were and the bell was to press
when you arrived.)

The Bizcracker Bird made a nice cup of tea (as you do when someone's upset). She listened to Bing with her wing around him, and told him not to fret.

"I was yellow and ripe," said Bing with a sigh, "and now I'm just red hot."

"Don't worry my dear," said the wise old Bird, dropping another tea bag in the pot,
