Alex stood there next to me.
His arms were folded tight.
He turned his head away from me,
so I wasn't in his sight.

"He didn't take me racing,"
said Alex to the wall.

"I thought he didn't like me,
and he didn't care at all."

"I do," I shouted loudly.
"Calm down," said Mr Clare,
"getting overheated won't get us anywhere."

“Because I didn’t have a bike
you didn’t think of me.

My Mum bought me a skateboard - that’s as fast as bikes can be.”

Alex turned to look at me,
with tears in his eyes.

(I know someone is hurting
when a person cries.)
